

Percent of Households with Income $100,000 or More WASHINGTON STATE

- King County by far had the highest shares of households (12.9 percent) with income greater than $100,000. This was nearly half again the share of the next-highest region.
- At the other extreme was the West Balance region with 4.1 percent of its households earning more than $100,000.

About the State Population Survey

The Washington State Population Survey was conducted in the spring of 1998 to provide social, demographic, and economic information about Washington residents that would otherwise not be available between the 1990 and 2000 federal census years.

Responses to the survey were obtained from telephone interviews of 7,279 households that represent the state population as a whole. The survey was designed by the Office of Financial Management and conducted by the Washington State University Social and Economic Sciences Research Center.

Data from the survey, as well as a background report titled, 1998 Washington State Population Survey Data Report, are available electronically at <http://www.wa.gov/ofm/> under Population/Data, or by calling the Office of Financial Management at (360) 902-0599.
